Salutatio.

We are sorry to have been so delayed in presenting this issue of the KALEIDOSCOPE to its patrons. In consequence of this we make all the customary apologies, and smiling our sweetest smile to appease your wrath, we graciously submit our work to your inspection, hoping that it will fulfill its original purpose, and meet with your approval.

We are unable to make our KALEIDOSCOPE equal to papers of like purport of the larger colleges,—it is owing partly to the smallness of our numbers, and partly to the lack of support we have from the students generally. Money is the great thing necessary to make the KALEIDOSCOPE a grand success. But the "evidence" is sadly lacking. In spite of this we have endeavored to present you a respectable number of the KALEIDOSCOPE. And we beg you to criticise our maiden attempts at editorship as lightly as possible, and to pass leniently over all unfortunate mistakes and imperfections you may discover.

PAUCI IN NUMERO, SED—.

It is quite common for those who are appointed to write Senior editorials to compare the course of study which they are about to complete to a hill, the summit of which they are approaching; and when the few who read these productions have reached the conclusion, they are usually left in a state of painful uncertainty as to the probable fate of those whose fortunes they have been tracing over the conventional chasms, bowlders, thorns, windfalls and other bug-bears, with which Senior editorials are so plentifully furnished. Ordinarily the adventurers are left standing on the top of the mountain which they have scaled, enveloped in the radiant halo of their success, as if there were nothing further worth striving for. For the present writer to employ this figure, although it has the sanction of antiquity, would be unprofitable for two or three reasons: First, because so much talent has already been expended upon it that he could add nothing new to the force which it now possesses; and secondly, because it is somewhat mischievous, as tending to increase the conceit which undergraduates of colleges are apt to affect. Since, then, honesty and humble talent forbid us to lean upon the staff which has supported so many who have found themselves in a like position with ourselves, let us turn in another direction, and, sifting out two or three expressions current among college students, let us analyze them and see if we can detect the principles upon which they are founded. The following suggest themselves: "The sheltering arms of Alma Mater," "The cold outside world," and "Climbing the hill of knowledge."

The two first named are intimately connected, inasmuch as that, if the arms of our Alma Mater shelter and protect us, we may reasonably expect the world beyond, which takes little interest in us except as we prove to it our ability to make ample returns for favors received, to be somewhat chilly; unless, as may be the case, we have already suffered the first hard thumps and measured swords with Fortune.

The question, then, which naturally presents itself is, do Alma Mater's arms so shelter us? In a certain sense they do; of that more will be said hereafter; but, for the most part, when you hear a young man prate of "The sheltering arms of Alma Mater," you may be pretty sure that he means the sheltering arms of his father's pocket book. The majority of the college students are in the position of minors, since they are dependent upon some one else for support, while they are pursuing their studies; and very naturally they attribute that support to the institution through which they are enabled to enjoy it; being thus supported they feel the transition from dependence to independence, in the same manner as the non-collegiate minor who finds it necessary, at length, to break away from his father's purse-strings. I doubt if any thing more is ordinarily implied.

As to the "cold outside world:" The world is always cold towards those who cannot win their spurs; and to what purpose does a young man go to college if not to better his chances of a warm reception by providing himself with a staff which he may use to assist him over the rough places of the road which we are all traveling, and whose termination is marked by a marble slab and a little mound of earth?

We come, finally, to "the hill of"—fiddlesticks. When a rattle-headed youngster has received his diploma, he gazes complacently around him and comes out with the startling declaration: "I have reached the summit of the hill of knowledge;" forgetting that the colleges of the United States alone are yearly turning out hundreds of graduates who have pulled the same old Greek roots, overcome the same problems in mathematics, and grappled successfully with the same Psychological "stickers" that have puzzled him; not to speak of the German University students who are better grounded in the studies which he has been pursuing. when they enter college, than he is when he leaves it—forgetting, too, that this same hill is so high that no one has ever yet reached the top. Do not say that the construction which we have put upon this expression: "I have reached the summit of the hill of knowledge," is strained. How many young men and women have you not heard say that they have finished their education (?) as if they could ever do that. We all need much less than we have of that within us which is constantly telling us that we know something.

We have said that there was a sense in which the expression, "The sheltering arms of our Alma Mater," might properly be used; and in so far as this is true, the other expression, "A cold outside world," as distinguished from the student's world, is also allowable. What, then, has Alma Mater given us, which we could not have wrung from other sources? Not the Latin or the Greek or the mathematical knowledge which we have obtained under her board of instructors.

That, and much besides, is all contained in books; not the discipline which she has given us, for we may discipline ourselves. What then? Something which is not put down in the curriculum. Something which no one can ever have who has not, for four years, assembled with his classmates at the stroke of the old bell, grasped their hands in a reluctant farewell at the close of the term, and welcomed them back when the vacation was ended, sung the college songs with them, laughed with them at the jests and quips of the recitation room, aye, and wept with them,—when the best loved of all died. We have quarreled, too, sometimes; but now, as the time for parting comes nearer and nearer to us, we have moments when suspicious lumps rise in our throats; and always, after such moments, we are a little kinder and more indulgent toward one another. Memories of what we have had in common come to us oftener and press harder upon us. Thoughts of separation are harder to bear; and there are times, even, when it seems to us as though that outside world could not but be cold and dreary, and that our Alma Mater's arms are indeed sheltering us.

JUNIOR CLASS.

WHOA! EMMA!

ON the Home Stretch! for now we are Juniors, tho' we can hardly realize that we have passed over one-half of our college course; yet when we glance at our class we see that changes have taken place. We miss familiar faces. Some, who have participated with us in the trials and triumphs of Freshman and Sophomore years, have now left us; but we formed a strong friendship for them ere they departed, and they will ever be remembered by their old classmates. We also see new faces, and rejoice that, tho' we have lost some, others have come in to fill their places. We extend to them a hearty welcome, and assure them that '80 is ready to receive them into her large heart.

We can also see changes in ourselves. We are beginning to realize the responsibilities of life, and hence our mirth is of a somewhat more subdued character. Many friends have been left behind us in our course. With moistened eyes we have watched the darting flames rise from the body of the departed Analytics. Trig. is no more, and Greek has ceased to display for us her beautiful forms; only the ghost of Latin remains. But in place of these, other friends have appeared. We are fast becoming keen logicians, while in the Laboratory our talents certainly display themselves.

Moreover, we are not now obliged to spout from the college rostrum the worn-out speeches of the old masters, but we proclaim in burning words of eloquence our own thoughts. Indeed, we are Juniors! and tho' the ease of the Junior year is proverbial, the natural activity of our natures will not permit us to rest when there is so much to be done; for with the goal almost in sight, we feel the need of activity.

Thus, welcoming the coming, and bidding God-speed to the departing, with hearts eager for our work, we enter upon our Junior year; and we are confident that the many victories of the past will insure future success to the noble class of '80.

Students, Profs., and grave alumni
  See in us their brightest hope,
And we need no eulogiums,
  In this year's Kaleidoscope.
So my lads, let's all go fishing!
  Bait your hook! Prepare your line!
Pleasures rare shall hover 'round you,
  With the gods of mirth we dine.
Just a year ago we gathered,
  Fifteen strong with line and hook,
Fifteen stout and hearty fishers,
  Each his little row boat took.
How we pulled up roots and fractions!
  Old Greek stems! so deeply sunk,
That our efforts to obtain them,
  Often caused a shameful flunk.
How we pulled up conjugations!
  Angles, circles, rules and arcs!
And when annuals were added,
  Almost swamped our little barks.
Yet, again we meet, my classmates,
  Near the stream of classic lore,
And the skiffs at high tide floating,
  Are much less than e'er before,
Brighter boats, with tinseled trappings,
  Gaily spangled with renown,
Spread their nets for our companions,
  And, remorseless, gulped them down.
Peace be with them, they have left us,
  But my comrades, they'll be blue
When they listen to the story,
  How we hooked up eighty-two.
This is not our first excursion,
  But this year the sport is fine;
How an arc with bait of cosine
  Pulls cotangent from the brine!
Bait your hook with Baron Napier,
  Drop it gently o'er the stern,
Ten to one you catch triangle,
  Just the one for which you yearn.
Only two more years for fishing,
  It behooves us to be spry:
Let each effort make a capture,
  Don't forget the little fry,
Hooks well baited with odd moments,
  Are enough for little fry.
Keep your bait of earnest study,
  For the bigger fish to try.
Cast your net for small exceptions,
  Draw them in on every hand.
More the number, more the glory,
  When your boat returns to land.
And when college days are over,
  Let us hope our final haul
May be merited diplomas,
  And a true A. B. for all.

DIEU EST TOUJOURS POUR LES GROS BATAILLONS.

WHAT a vigorous impulse was imparted to the college! How her heart throbbed, quickened, and her sluggish blood went coursing through her veins! How her whole system, roused from its languor, was renewed when the advent of '81 was heralded throughout the halls! and how the cheeks of '81 blanched! how her knees smote together, and her heart misgave her at the sight of our well-filed ranks! And have ye not heard how she attempted to assert her superiority, and how miserably she was punished for her pains? Oh! 81, why this dejected attitude, this sickly smile? Is it because the wild music of our horns, or the tuneful lays of the "Duke" still lingers in thy ears? As we pity the weak and erring, so are we bound to pity thee, and in passing we drop a tear upon the grave of thy ruined hopes and fallen aspirations.

So then we are Freshmen—yes, Freshmen, and we glory in our appellation. Long have we aspired, nobly have we labored to attain this position, and, from being merely lookers-on, to become actors in the scenes of college life.

We are proud of our class; proud of its fun and jollity; proud of its past and present, and, as we may say with confidence, we shall have reason to be proud of its future. The records of her exploits have been spread far and wide, until her very name has become synonymous with that of victory. No defeat has as yet stained her annals, and ought we not therefore to augur a successful career for her future? Then hurrah for '82! Let the triumphant note ring out until our classic halls shall re-echo with the sound, and our grand old campus shall tremble with its reverberations.

TERMS OF ADMISSION.

For admission to the Freshman Class, candidates are examined in the following studies:

Latin Grammar, including the Rules of Prosody and Scanning; Cæsar's Commentaries, four books, or Sallust's Conspiracy of Catiline; Cicero, six orations, including the four against Catiline; Virgil, the Bucolics, and six books of the Æneid; Arnold's Latin Prose Composition to the VIIth Chapter.

Greek Grammar; Xenophon's Anabasis, three books; Homer's Iliad, two books; Jones' Greek Composition, twelve lessons.

Ancient and Modern Geography.

Arithmetic; Algebra. through Quadratic Equations; and three books of Loomis' Geometry.

Real equivalents will be accepted in place of any of the Latin or Greek authors named above.

A thorough familiarity with the elements of the Latin and the Greek Grammars is an indispensable requirement for admission.

Students may be admitted to an advanced standing, provided that, in addition to the requisites for admission to the Freshman class, they are found, on examination, thoroughly acquainted with the several studies of the class which they propose to join. Candidates for such standing should, however, be informed that in consequence of the thorough discipline of the first College year, and the exactness of knowledge that is required of the student, no one can hope, if admitted, to maintain a respectable standing, unless he comes with a high degree of previous preparation. Indeed, it is highly important to the unity and completeness of a liberal education, that the students should enter college at the commencement of the course. The disadvantages incurred by those who postpone an entrance to a late period are much more serious than is commonly supposed.

Every student admitted to an advanced standing (with the exception of those who come from other colleges), is required to pay a fee of $5.00, if he enters after the expiration of the Fall Term of the Freshman year; and of $10.00, if after the Fall Term of the Sophomore year.

Candidates for admission must bring a certificate of good moral character; and, if from another college, of their regular dismission and good standing. When a young man has been examined and admitted to college, he is required to attend the prescribed exercises and is subject to the laws of the Institution.

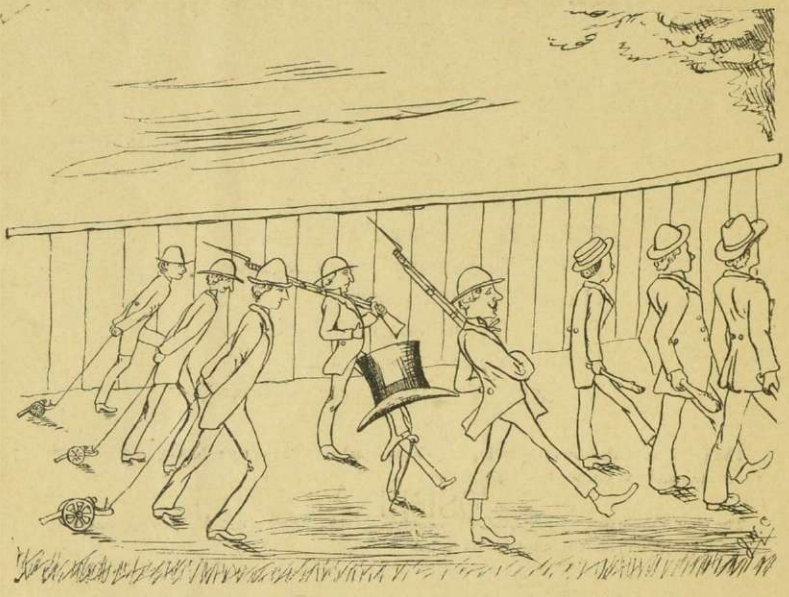
PECK. SWEET.



Poor Crusoe on his lonely isle
Saw footprints in the sand,
And fled, lest savage cannibals
Might drive him from the land.

Twelve Freshmen went to guard a man
In silk hat nicely dressed,
They saw the footprint of a Soph,
And fled like all possessed.
